SUMMARY OF MEETING: Collapsing incidents often involve a curb or some other obstacle, so the committee considered a test to oscillate the front and back wheels of a stroller loaded with 40 pounds in the seat and 10 pounds in the basket. Impact tests are also possible. Discussion of incidents involving children sliding out the top of the stroller seat led to clarification of "enclosures." The committee approved a hinged-board method of testing the recline angle of a stroller seat. A task group will check the wording of how to include a minimum crotch strap anchor point dimension that also has adjustability. The restraint test requiring a vertical pull on a CAMI dummy was recommended by the CPSC and a manufacturers will test this method against the old rotational test to compare.

The committee debated whether the occupant retention foot barrier should be automatic when the stroller is converted to a carriage. The CPSC presented incident data involving jogging strollers for the committee to read and analyze.
